IMPORTANT INFORMATION

A GUIDE TO VISITING ANIMAL DISPLAYS

As you prepare for your excursion, the Royal Agricultural Society of NSW (RAS) would encourage you to keep in mind the possible health risk that comes with exposure to any animals. Biosecurity means taking steps to prevent the spread of diseases from animals and the animal environment to people.

The RAS recommends you follow the simple guidelines below.

- Before the excursion, discuss how children will be supervised, especially for proper hand washing, with accompanying carers to ensure duty of care requirements are met.
- Before the excursion, conduct an educational session with the children explaining
 - The health risks associated with animals and their environment and the procedures to reduce the risk of contamination;
 - That tormenting, hitting or chasing animals is not appropriate behaviour. Respectful behaviour towards animals reduces the risk of disease spread, for example through accidental scratching or biting.
- Ensure any open wounds are covered.
- Always wash hands after leaving the animal enclosures, whether animals were touched or not. You will find hand wash facilities conveniently located at the exit to every animal pavilion.
- Wash hands with soap and running water, ensuring paper towel is then used to dry hands leaving no residue behind. This is most important before eating.
- Do not eat or drink in animal contact areas.
- Ensure children do not suck their fingers, touch their mouth with their hands or kiss the animals.
- In the days after the excursion, if a member of the group becomes ill (eg diarrhoea, nausea, vomiting) advise them to visit their doctor and explain that they have had recent contact with animals.

We encourage you to refer to the correct procedures for hand washing as displayed overleaf. Similar signage will be posted at hand wash stations around Sydney Showground with clear directional signage to assist you locate hand wash stations during your excursion.
